The bad news- Unfortunately, there is no way I'll be able to finish MW3 before the end of the year. At the current rate, it looks like it will be ready sometime next summer. I'll take a month here and there to work on it, and continue to do monthlies inbetween to keep supporters entertained with new content. That said, I've continuously put work into the project, but given how demanding the monthlies have become, it hasn't been as easy to find time to get momentum on the project given its size and scope. I'm trying to not replicate what I did with MW2 as far as my work process goes though, as I was working constant 12-14 hour days almost every single day for at least 3 months of the summer to finish it, and that completely sucked any and all enjoyment out of the production process. But, I'd like you guys to know that I am trying my best. At the end of the day I'm just one person made of flesh and blood like any one of you, and I still need to be human and live a little to continuously improve at this job while staying healthy. Eventually MW3 will be here, it will never be cancelled.

The good news- While the finished product may still be a ways away, I'm very happy with how it's come along. Each of the sets are significantly more intricate than usual, and I have spent 5-7 days building and lighting each of them (5 or 6 sets total depending on what ends up in the final cut). I had a very particular vision for every scene in MW3, so I ended up modeling a larger number of set components from scratch than usual so it took a bit longer. Rebecca and Claire have also been updated to feature the same quality of soft body (breast, butt, thighs) physics as I've had in recent monthlies alongside hair physics, and updated rigging, so I'd say their porting process from Daz to Blender has been very successful as both models look just as good as they did in Daz (actually better in certain regards). Every character also has a few outfit changes throughout the animation, each of which are simulated for Rebecca and Claire. Building/making all of this work and look good has been the most time consuming component so far, but I think I've been successful. These efforts have made the final product feel more cinematic. I have also been saving money for a while and have written a few pages of notes for music because I'm very interested in hiring a professional composer to write an original score for this installment and to re-score the rest of the series. Then, I also want to hire a small ensemble of musicians to record the original score, instead of having a computer generated score. All together, this will be very expensive if done the way I'm hoping to do it, but hopefully I can make it happen without it causing bankruptcy. We'll see.
